You may have heard that Change Healthcare, a member of UnitedHealth Group (UHG), recently experienced a cyberattack. The Trustees have been, and will continue, monitoring UHG and Change Healthcare's actions to address the effects of the cyberattack on patients, healthcare providers, and pharmacies.

UnitedHealth Group is now offering free credit monitoring and identity theft protection for two years to anyone impacted by the cyberattack (basically at this point anyone who calls to enroll). Individuals can enroll in the free credit monitoring and identity theft protection by calling the dedicated call center at 1-866-262-5342. The call center, however, will not be able to provide any specific information pertaining to your data.

UnitedHealth Group reported that although it is not currently able to identify the specific individuals whose data may have been impacted by the cyberattack, an initial targeted data sampling revealed that a substantial number of files containing protected health information (PHI) or personally identifiable information (PII) was affected. UHG further reported, that to date it has not seen evidence of exfiltration of materials such as doctors' charts or full medical histories among the compromised data and believes that due to the ongoing nature and complexity of the data review, it will likely take several months of continued analysis to identify and notify impacted customers and individuals.

You may obtain general information and developments pertaining to the cyberattack on the UnitedHealth Group's dedicated website at <http://changeybersupport.com>.
